The Labor and Employment Relations Association (LERA, formerly known as IRRA) is a professional membership organization dedicated to the fields of labor relations and human resources management. Our local chapter, formed more than 30 years ago, brings together representatives of labor, management, government, academics and neutrals. The membership includes administrators of labor relations agencies, leaders of local unions and employer associations, members of the National Academy of Arbitrators as well as experienced practitioners from every branch of our field.

Our Chapter meets on a regular basis for lively and informative presentations. This provides an opportunity to network while exchanging ideas and keeping informed of new trends and developments in labor relations, and employment and labor law. Your dues help support the operation of our Chapter and underwrite program expenses.

We will likely be having another meeting in June and we will resume programming in the Fall.
